- 124 LINDEMANS FRAMBOISE: 2.5% abv. Raspberry flavored ale. It is a variation on the traditional Belgian practice of macerating fruits in "wild-fermented" summer beers. The aroma is magnificent, the palate delicate, with undertones of fruity acidity . . . . . $9.45
- 137 PIRAAT ALE: 10.5% abv. Belgium brewers are individualists and they produce some of the world's great beers. Seldom understated, some as strong as barley wine and they demand great feats of balance on the part of their brewmasters . . . . . $6.65
- 141 CHIMAY GRANDE RESERVE: 9% abv. Trappist Monks of Chimay Abbey brew this ale by combining their artisan water with fine barley malt, an aromatic blend of hops, and CHIMAY's uniquely cultivated yeasts . . . . . $9.35
- 142 CHIMAY RED: 7% abv. This bottle-conditioned Trappist Ale from the Abbey of Scourmont in Belgium has a rich copper color and a soft complex palate with hints of black currant in the background . . . . . $8.65
- 150 CHIMAY CING CENTS: 8% abv. Top fermentation gives this Ale its hoppy, dry character and distinctive bouquet . . . . . $8.95
- 155 DUCHESSE de BOURGONE: 6.2% abv. Sweet, fruity tasting, with a pleasant sour oakiness, refreshing aftertaste . . . . . $9.00
- 163 IMPERIUM BELGIUM LAGER: 5% abv. Sweet grains and mild grassy hop flavor . . . . . $3.40
- 167 PETRUS AGED RED ALE: 8.5% abv. Incredibly unique with a supremely invigorating taste . . . . . $6.95

- 171 BLANCHE De BRUXELLES: 4.5% abv. Traditional world-recipe. Unique unmalted wheat, refreshing and famous Belgian ingredients barley and soft yellow color, sour/sweet taste. Brewed with coriander and orange peel $4.80
- 176 DELIRIUM TREMENS ALE: 9% abv. Very dark gold, with a huge, slightly rocky head. Relatively sweet on the palate with the fruit and spice of the aroma melding beautifully with the light hops a peppery alcohol . . . . . $8.85
- 177 CORSENDONK MONK'S PATER DUBBEL ALE: 7.5% abv. A robust, burgundy-colored ale in the classic style of Belgium's Trappist Monks. Has a yeasty, fruity, slightly smoky bouquet. On the palate it has notes of port, raisins, and black chocolate . . . . . $11.25
- 179 DELIRIUM NOCTURNUM: 9% abv. It has a creamy head and is as murky as a Mississippi mud pie. This rare find looks like Texas oil and smells like the sap of some aging Bavarian oak. Supposedly the State of Washington banned this beer because of a law that forbids the sale of an alcohol product that promotes "excessive drinking" - apparently, the Webster Dictionary's definition of Delirium conjured connotations of frenzied or crazy consumers. This is a sipping beer, so do not chug - or you may be branded as a frenzied minion of the beer variety . . . . . $8.85
- 184 DUBUISSON SCALDIS AMBER: Sweet fruitiness with an alcohol warmth that comes with 11.8% beer . . . . . $7.40
- 193 GENTSE GRUUT WIT: 5% abv. Malt beverage brewed with spices . . . . . $5.45

BRAZIL

BEER LANGUAGE

ALE: The English term for a brew made with a top fermenting yeast, which should impart to it a distinctive fruitiness. Ales vary from light to dark and delicate to full bodied, depending upon the volume of malted barley, hops, and degree of roasting of the malted barley. Because of the relatively higher fermenting temperatures, ales often extract more of the flavor from their ingredients. Ales are still brewed around the world, but most of the distinctive styles known today originated in Britain. The British used hops in brewing by the 10th century, but the practice somehow died out and did not reassert itself until 1552, when King Edward VI issued an edict allowing their use. Virtually all ales now use hops in the recipe, though some use additional flavorings. Ales also are commonly conditioned or aged in the bottle to develop strength and flavor.

ALT: A German style of top-fermenting beer, altbier comes from the German alt, meaning "old." These light ales are cold-conditioned, making them more similar in taste to lagers than ales.

AMERICAN LAGER: The largest selling beers in this country, including the leading lights, all fall into this rather broad category. The style is derived from European pilsners and tends to be clean and crisp with more carbonation and minimal hop character.

BARLEY WINE: An English term for an extra-strong ale. These brews are very strong (7.5% to 14% alcohol by volume) and are intended to rival great wines in terms of depth, complexity, smoothness and body.

BITTER: This name implies a depth of hop bitterness. These beers are usually bronze to deep copper in color and heavily hopped, giving them a high degree of hops bitterness with some acidity in the finish.

BOCK: The German term for a strong beer. They can range in color from golden to tawny to brown and are generally stronger than typical lagers (more than 6.25% alcohol by volume). Bock beers are usually brewed to be served in Autumn, late Winter, or Spring depending on the company.

BROWN ALE: Traditionally this is a mild brew that is also called Nut Brown Ale. A sweet, dark brown ale is brewed in southern England. Brown ales brewed in northern England are more reddish in color, slightly higher in alcoholic content, and have a drier finish.

CREAM ALE: An American invention, cream ales are usually blends of pale golden, mild, light-bodied ale and lager. Only two outstanding examples remain in this country, Genesee Cream Ale and Little Kings.

DOPPELBOCK: "Double" bock. German extra-strong bottom-fermenting beer. Usually tawny or dark brown in color. Names of this type of beer usually end in-ator.

DORTMUNDER: Technically, this is a beer brewed in the German city of Dortmund, but it often refers to the city's classic style of Export. There are actually seven brewing companies in the city of Dortmund producing a wide variety of beer styles with the name Dortmunder. The Export style is a beer that is pale and medium dry, with a little more body and alcoholic content than pale lagers from Munich and Pilsen.

DRY BEER: Originally a style in Germany where carbohydrates were diminished by a very thorough fermentation (creating a high alcohol content), dry beer was popularized by Japanese brewers. The mild version brewed in America has a conventional alcohol content, and is noted for having no "beery" aftertaste. Although brewers felt the category showed a great deal of promise in the late '80's, it turned out to be more of a fad than a new direction.

DUNKEL: German word for dark.

GOSE: Gose is a top-fermented beer that originated in Goslar, Germany. It is brewed with at least 50% of the grain bill being malted wheat. Dominant flavours in gose include a lemon sourness, a herbal characteristic, and a strong saltiness (the result of either local water sources or added salt). Gose beers typically do not have prominent hop bitterness, flavours, or aroma. The beers typically have a moderate alcohol content of 4 to 5% ABV.

GOLDEN ALE: Originally produced in the late 19th century to compete with the growing popularity of golden lagers. They tend to be light to medium in body with some hop aroma and a clean finish.

HEFE: In Germany this means yeast. If a beer is sedimented with yeast, it may be prefixed Hefe.

ICE: First introduced in Canada in 1993, this style has been embraced by most of the large U.S. and Canadian brewers. It has been more successful than dry beer but still accounts for less than 4% of U.S. beer volume. There are several different methods being used for brewing ice beer although Labatt claims to have invented ice brewing at cooler-than-normal temperatures then chilling the beer to below freezing to form ice crystals, which are then filtered out.

INDIA PALE ALE: This style was originally created in the 1700's with a higher alcohol content and a double dose of hops (a natural preservative) to withstand the long and arduous shipment to British troops and colonists in India. This style is popular with many American microbrewers.

LAGER: When bottom-fermenting yeasts were discovered, their advantages were quickly promoted first through Europe and then the world. Bottom fermentation takes place at lower temperatures of between 40 and 55 degrees, and the yeast settles to the bottom of the fermenting vat, out of harm's way. When the process was first discovered, many brewers produced the new lager during the colder winter months, and continued to brew ale the spring and summer. As advances in refrigeration techniques took hold, brewers were able to brew the new type of beer year-round. Lager comes from the German word lager, which means to store. The beer was not only brewed at lower temperatures for a longer period of time (anywhere from five to fourteen instead of the two to four days for ales), it was then stored in cold cellars to undergo a slow second fermentation and aging process. The classic lager is made from only malted barley, hops, yeast, and water as dictated by the Bavarian Purity Law of 1516. Lagers range in color from straw to chocolate.

LAMBIC: Brewed in Belgium, lambics are made with both barley and 30% TO 40% unmalted wheat. The mash is left to ferment spontaneously with wild yeast from the atmosphere for a night, then barreled for the rest of the primary and a secondary fermentation. Lambics are sometimes casked with cherries, raspberries or other fruit. Young lambics are dry, sour, cloudy, and similar in taste to a cider. Aged lambics are more mellow and settled.

LIGHT BEER: This is an American term, indicating a watery Pilsner-type beer.

MAIBOCK: A bock beer of excellent quality. Made for the first of May to Celebrate Spring!

MALT LIQUOR: Not especially malty, though they are usually low in hop character. They are usually the strongest beers in an American brewers range and cheaply made!

MARZEN: Originally a beer brewed in March and laid down in caves before summer weather rendered brewing impossible. Intended to be consumed in the summer months. Marzen eventually came to be associated with one specific style – a malty, medium-strong version of the Vienna style.

MILD: The English term for ales that are only mildly hopped, and therefore less bitter than "bitters" or "stouts." Most are dark brown, though they range in color to copper. They are full-bodied in flavor, but have relatively low alcohol content.

MUNCHENER (or Munich-style): This dark brown lager is full-bodied with a sweet alt. flavor and slight hop taste that is more creamy and aromatic than a light lager. The dark color and malty flavor come from roasted barley. Most dark super premiums and imports (Michelob Dark, Lowenbrau Dark, Beck's Dark) are fashioned after Munchener beers.

PALE ALE: Pale generally refers to the color of the malt used to brew this ale. The malt is only dried instead of roasted, giving the resulting brew a lighter bronze or copper color than the brown ales, and a lighter, less hearty flavor.

PILSNER (or PILS): A true pilsner can only come from the town of Pilsen, Czechoslovakia. Pilsner Urquell ("original") is the only real pilsner still around, but most light lager beers are now modeled after this style. Loosely, any golden-colored, dry bottom fermenting beer of conventional strength is referred to as a pilsner. A classic pilsner has a gravity of around 12 plato and is characterized by the hoppiness of its flowery aroma and dry finish.

PORTER: A style developed in London in the early 1700's in response to customer demands for a blended brew drawn from casks of pale ale and brown or stout, Porter was originally a heavy brew. The style has been revived in recent years and is made of highly roasted malt. A lighter bodied companion to the stout. Porters are sometimes fruity or can have a deep smoked flavor

RAUCHBIER: Smoked malts are used in the production of this dark, bottom-fermented specialty

SCOTCHALE: In a country known more for its malt whiskies, Scotch ales are heavily dominated by malt flavor, but range in strength. A term to identify a strong and often extremely dark malt-accented specialty.

STOUT: Stout has a dark, almost black color (due to highly roasted malt), and a rich malty flavor usually combined with a strong, bitter hops taste. There are a couple of versions of this type of ale. "Dry" stout, best exemplified by Guinness, is the Irish style, which is more "hoppy" in character and may contain roasted unmalted barley. "Sweet" or "milk" stout was given its name because of the lactose used as a non-fermentable sugar in the brew, giving it a sweeter taste. "Imperial" stout was originally brewed in Russia and adopted as an English style. It's usually medium dry, very heavy, and generally very strong.

TRAPPIST: By law, only the monks bearing this name may rightly use the term Trappist to describe their brews. The order has five breweries in Belgium and one in The Netherlands that produce a variety of ales under the nomenclature. The ales are usually brewed with candy sugar and bottle-conditioned and range in color from bronze to dark brown. In their daily life, the monks will drink their least-strong brew, and may refer to their more potent product for religious holidays and commercial sales.

URQUELL: "Original" or "Source of" in German. Urquell is characterized by a hoppy aroma and a dry finish, unlike most of the pilsner style beers produced in this country which have less body and character.

VIENNA: An amber-red lager originally produced in Vienna. The term, Vienna, also still refers to the amber-red kilned malt that produces this style of beer.

WEISSE (or Weissbier): German for "white" beer, implying a pale brew made from wheat. Brewed from wheat instead of the more traditional barley, weisse beer also is brewed with top-fermenting yeast. Most are light and tart in taste with a bready or yeasty aroma, and pale in color.
